Dr. Lisa D. Jenkins is an award-winning cultural strategist helping organizations unleash cultures of impact that empower individuals and strengthen teams by successfully embracing multicultural settings. With a diverse background that includes professional positions in human resources divisions in Fortune 100 companies, Lisa's passion is to equip teams and increase productivity by strengthening individuals through cultural competency. Known for her engaging and transparent style of communication, Lisa's passion spans the arenas of corporate America, academia, and civic engagement.

A sought-after facilitator, trainer, and lecturer, Dr. Lisa's topics address multicultural workforces, diversity, equity and inclusion, along with intergenerational communication, and unconscious bias. She also addresses the integration of formerly incarcerated workers into the workforce. An adjunct lecturer with the country's largest urban university system, she teaches multicultural studies and cultural diversity.

Dr. Lisa leads one of New York's oldest, historic congregations, located in Harlem, New York and performs extensive ecumenical work promoting equity and justice for humanity.

She has taught, lectured, facilitated, preached, and given keynote speeches across the country and has written numerous publications. As an entrepreneur, Lisa is the founder of LDJ Global Connections, a firm dedicated to exploring and advancing multicultural spaces.

Dr. Jenkins is a certified Prepare/Enrich facilitator, and has served on the board of trustees for the Helene Fuld College of Nursing and the advisement committee of the National Association for the Advancement of African American Children with Learning Differences. Dr. Jenkins was appointed to Manhattan Community Board 10 as well as numerous task forces and has worked in nonpartisan environments with a goal of enriching and empowering individuals, communities, and organizations.
