

Speaker-tainer: PASSING ZONE

Here's a sentence you don't hear very often: "If you want a sure thing, hire jugglers."

Jon Wee and Owen Morse knock it out of the park each and every time, and they are one of the surest things in this business.

The "entertainment" part is a no-brainer: audiences doubled over with laughter, CEOs braving sharp knives flying around their body, standing ovations, roaring chainsaws mixed with classical ballet, and even audience members flying through the air – this show has it all. No wonder they have been featured on The Tonight Show, the Montreal Comedy Festival, at The White House, in London with Prince Charles, and at corporate functions everywhere.

And what about the "speaker" part? Yes, they truly cross over from entertaining comedy act to keynote speaker with ease. So much so, this year they were inducted into the Speaker Hall of Fame of the National Speaker's Association, an honor awarded to only the top echelon of professional speakers. They are the only jugglers ever to receive this honor, and one of a very small handful of bonafide entertainment acts to be so awarded by their speaker peers.

Their new Keynote, "The Passing Zone on ICE: Innovation, Collaboration, Execution" delivers a spot-on message about the importance of these three concepts for the success of any organization or company. Mr. Wee and Mr. Morse do extensive research and pre-show phone calls with each client to determine how innovation, collaboration and execution are crucial for their particular audience and event, so they can deliver their message on target, every time.

A speaker will get up and tell audiences about concepts for success. The difference with The Passing Zone is that they actually DO IT, right in front of the audience's eyes. The concepts are so much clearer when they are actually demonstrated. The credibility of the message is obvious, and the presentation can focus more on the action and fun on stage, rather than the words that are spoken.

Teamwork has always been a cornerstone of The Passing Zone's message. And that's what every corporate event is really about: bringing people together to improve the way they work together. Nothing demonstrates the importance of teamwork, partnership, trust, working in sync together, than two guys throwing running chain saws between each other! Their entire presentation, from beginning to end, is exactly what any group is trying to achieve: a flawless display of world-class excellence, delivered with class, creativity, and fun.

For more info: www.passingzone.com
CMI @ (877) 307-7403