

John Sitalides is a Washington D.C. geopolitical risk and international relations specialist, and Senior Fellow for National Security at the Foreign Policy Research Institute.

He brings nearly four decades of political, business, and foreign policy analysis and experience to inform investor, corporate, government, and civic leadership audiences of U.S. and global risk trends, international threat assessments, and geopolitical strategies.

He launched and directed two respected international relations institutes in Washington D.C., including at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.

Under a U.S. government contract since 2006, Sitalides is the Southern Europe Regional Coordinator at the Foreign Service Institute, the State Department's professional development and diplomacy academy for American foreign policy professionals.

He launched his career in the U.S. Senate, has testified before Congress, and is a frequent national security commentator on Bloomberg News and other U.S. and international media.

He holds a Master's Degree in International Affairs, specializing in International Security Policy, from the Columbia University School of International and Public Affairs.